Description

Provide a short description of the event and its activities.

The project partners Association for International Affairs (AMO), Adapt Institute, the EAST Center and the Charles University successfully conducted the foreseen 12 workshops in the spring and autumn semester, as outlined in the grant proposal, with four workshops in each of Czech Republic, Slovakia, and Poland. Additionally, three extra workshops were held, two at Campus Polska in Olsztyn, Poland, and another at Masaryk University in Brno, Czech Republic. These events were attended by 233 unique participants, predominantly students of International Relations, European Studies, Political Science, Journalism, and Media Studies.

Furthermore, one workshop was also organized during the Summer School of Journalism in Havlíčův Brod, Czech Republic, drawing 53 attendees (34 women and 19 men), including students, as well as young professionals in journalism, media studies, and literature.

The workshops focused on disinformation, foreign malign influence, hybrid threats, and strategic communication, with a special emphasis on their impact on democratic processes such as elections. This was particularly relevant given the timing of the autumn Slovak and Polish parliamentary elections and the upcoming European Parliamentary elections. The discussions aimed to bolster the participants' resilience against real-life manipulations they might encounter during these elections.

To enhance the learning experience, at least half of the workshops were co-facilitated by partners from other project countries, fostering a rich exchange of insights, lessons learned, and best practices. Participants received background materials on the discussed topics to provide them with an overview. Following each workshop, an EU Survey was distributed.
